- Reason for Egg Donation

I want to become an egg donor because I have witnessed many real-life cases around me where families desperately want children but face physiological limitations. Among my friends are same-sex couples who are deeply in love and ready for parenthood, but they can only rely on donor eggs to make it happen. I also know older relatives who struggled with poor egg quality due to age and failed repeatedly at pregnancy. Most unforgettable was a young female friend who, despite her youth, couldn't ovulate naturally due to a congenital condition. That helpless longing to have a child has stayed with me. These experiences have made me realize that being able to donate eggs healthily is a special ability—and a meaningful choice that can bring hope and change. I am ready—not only for myself, but to support those facing challenges on their fertility journey. I maintain my health to ensure I can help the families who need it and offer my support in both body and mind.

I hope my contribution can ignite hope in people yearning for a child and remind them they are not alone—people like me are willing to quietly be that light. This act of giving may not yield immediate rewards, but it could bring a lifetime of happiness to a family. That is what I truly want to do.
